Over the years I've had to work hard to find the best gifts for cat lovers as my wife and her friends absolutely adore their feline children. In the more than twenty years we've been together I've had to really think outside the box to ensure a constant supply of presents, gifts, and trinkets for special occasions.

My wife's best friend is also a "cat lady", so we often find ourselves browsing for birthday and Christmas presents that tie into their love of cats. Choosing just the right gift is never easy, so here are some tips on what we do to find just the right gifts.

There really is nothing worse than unwrapping a gift only to discover the same tired old mug or t-shirt that everyone else has given over the years. What you really want to find when you unwrap your gift is something unique. Presents for cat lovers are not that hard to find, you just have to make a little extra effort.

However, gifts that show someone took effort and care to select are a little more difficult to run to ground. Special occasions are not unexpected events and so, with a little planning, can present you with the opportunity to really show your love and appreciation for your friends and family.

Birthdays and Christmas are two occasions that spring to mind as days that require an extra-special gift. Wedding anniversaries are another great opportunity to show off your talent for selecting appropriate gifts.

And don't even consider forgetting Valentine's Day.

Depending on age, you could also be buying graduation gifts or a gift celebrating an award or an achievement of note.

You will usually have some advance notice of an upcoming event so you can start planning well in advance. If you can combine the love of cats with another hobby or passion then your gifts will have so much more meaning for that "special someone".

For example, you could combine the love of cross-stitch with cats and find a beautiful cross-stitch pattern book of cat designs.

You will find clues to unusual gifts for people who love cats by combining two or more interests or hobbies. My wife for instance absolutely loves jewelry. Now that shouldn't be a surprise as I don't think I've met a girl who doesn't love a necklace, ring, or pin, especially if it's got a few sparkly diamonds to match their eyes.

But what do you get someone who has everything? Well, that's not really too difficult if you've been paying attention to what they say. Subtle clues while you're out and about, having lunch, or at a party will give you great clues as to what you can get them as a gift.

Pay attention to the types of gifts that they talk about, especially the ones they love and pay particular attention to things they really hate.

I can remember when my father, who was not exactly a paragon of virtue when it came to giving gifts, really put his foot in it on my mother's birthday many years ago.

Being in the metal industry, my father would often get advance notice of cutting edge products that were coming out around the world. So in his wisdom, he decided that my mother would love a new-fangled Teflon coated frying pan for her birthday. He was certain it would make a wonderful change of pace from the usual knitted sweater he bought her year in and year out.

Needless to say, she was less than impressed. Slaving away behind a stove for a large family wasn't exactly her idea of fun, so getting a frying pan didn't float her boat at all. I'm sure you get the picture. Put yourself in the other persons' shoes and ignore your own likes and dislikes. Try to take note of the clues that will help you combine the interests or hobbies of the person who will receive your gift.

As you can probably tell, I love buying presents. Cat lovers' birthday gifts have become a firm favorite of mine as my wife is nuts about our kitties. If it's got fur, four legs, tail, and goes meow then the love of my life adores it without reservation. My children will usually tap me for ideas about what's best to buy for their mother's birthday and it usually revolves around the cats.

When the kids were younger it was quite easy to come up with little projects and trinkets to buy. Now that they are older they really pull out all the stops when it comes to her birthday and obviously Mother's Day as well.

It's always a challenge to come up with a unique gift for someone you love. There is always that nagging worry that they won't like it. If you follow the principle of combining their likes, hobbies, or interests then you can't really go wrong.

A little planning goes a long way and I've got some of my best ideas while out and about with my wife when she has shown an interest in something in a shop window or comments about a product or item that grabs her fancy.

So hopefully the gifts for cat lovers that I've uncovered above will give you some ideas for that special someone in your life. I'd love to hear about the gifts you've bought.
